Quilts, Coverlets, and other Textiles Move to New Storage Area

The Renfrew Visitor's Center was designed with space for lectures, exhibits, restrooms and also for a climate controlled storage area for the artifacts from the museum not presently in use. The Staff has made it a policy to rotate furnishings on a yearly, and sometimes, seasonal basis (in addition to our three changing exhibits every year). This is done for the benefit of the visitor, so that local people can visit many times and see something different every time, and also for the benefit of the objects themselves. Most artifacts are given a "vacation" away from the dust, harmful sunlight, and humidity problem naturally prevalent in the museum. We now have a storage area to house the most fragile pieces in our collection. Our quilts, coverlets, and other textiles were some of the first pieces in the collection to be moved into their new home. It will now be much easier for us to study and show these objects, as well as keep track of their condition. All the quilts and coverlets are stored by rolling them on acid-free tubes and suspended in a special hanging rack, so that no stress is placed on any part of the fragile cloth. When closed, the storage area does not allow in any damaging natural light and the entire area can be maintained at an even temperature and humidity level year round.
